

Asian Journal of Comparative Politics

Call for Papers

Edited by Takashi Inoguchi

Published in association with University of Niigata Prefecture

The Asian Journal of Comparative Politics (AJCP) is a journal of Comparative Politics with the focus on Asia. AJCP believes in the importance of multiple angles and approaches and the need to explore previously underutilized Asian data and new insights derived therefrom. AJCP seeks to construct a frontier of comparison and a forum for comparative discussion with Europeanists and Americanists as well as among Asianists. The journal covers a range of topics, including political behavior and leadership, institutions and regime, state-society relations, political cultures, foreign policy and globalization.

The Asian Journal of Comparative Politics (AJCP) invites researchers from a range of disciplines, whose work reflects this overall aim and scope, to submit their original research to the journal. All articles will be subject to anonymous peer review, and will be evaluated on the basis of their theoretical and methodological contribution to advancing the understanding of Comparative Politics with a focus on Asia.

Please see the manuscript submission guidelines on the journal website for more information on how to submit your paper.

Call for Papers for Special Issues

The Asian Journal of Comparative Politics (AJCP) also calls for papers for the forthcoming special issues listed below. These special issues will appear in the first volume of the journal and will discuss new theoretical and methodological developments in Comparative Politics.

- Three Largest Democratic Elections in Asia; India, Indonesia and Japan in 2014
- Regime and Development of Political Science
- China and its Neighbors

You can also submit proposals for future Special Issues to the editor at inoguchi@ioc.u-tokyo.ac.jp
